Blast from the Past – Teaser Trailer for The Big Picture Sometimes, when the sun is shining down on a hot summer day, you need to catch some rays somewhere else. But occasionally, you're lucky enough to catch some blazing rays on a screen, and that's the case with Teaser Trailer for The Big Picture. It's a comedy about a camera with a chip that can take "big pictures", but a chip that can't be defeated by a sentient cartoon blob. The blob drags himself through the world, destroying things, and causing all kinds of mischief, much to the chagrin of the owner of the camera. The tagline of the trailer is "We're Not Broken. We're Just Learning."

However, on closer inspection of the trailer, it appears that the joke may be a tad on the nose. I think it actually comes down to the fact that the blob is a "sensible, rational" person, and the camera owner is almost an antithesis of that. Also, that they both "learn" in a very different way. Director Dan O'Bannon commented that "there are definitely some similarities between this film and a series of shorts by Kevin and Dan O'Malley of The Three Stooges entitled 'TV Relates'. The premise is basically the same, a film about a film camera that cannot be destroyed by any conventional means. In this case, it is a time-traveling device, and the intelligent young blob that it creates." The Big Picture will be releasing in 2019 on Comixology and various other digital means of distribution. Hopefully this will be a good way to fill the hole left behind by the shuttering of FUNimation Entertainment. (A full-length trailer will be uploaded to the official Facebook page at some point.) For those who missed it, The Big Picture is a comedy about a camera that takes "big pictures"
