Block tracking: Using the power of advanced machine learning, we add a new feature called Block tracking in which we will disable the ability to add you to our lists, and if it happens again, we'll disable the site, and even remove you completely. Of course, we don't use human verification and we only use machine learning to keep our users safe. "MyCharts": I do love how our "MyCharts" feature is coming along. Still in it's initial stages, but I'd say its looking pretty good. With this update, we also make some major changes to the actual visualizations themselves. I'm still working on the optimum size/resolution for the charts, but I'm really happy with how they look on desktop. "Realtime Throttles": With this update, we also bring in the real time throttling feature. We now have systems in place to allow us to respond to surges in requests, with minimal impact to our network. If you're familiar with Netflix's system, it's pretty much the same thing. We have about 3 servers and almost 10 times the capacity. It's amazing how an UI can bring about such a dramatic change. "Change Log": Between the updates, we also do have a change log to help you keep track of when we last updated. "More Improvements": There are a lot more little things we've fixed and added in. Simple stuff like various text size changes, and a bunch of other little things. Its pretty much common sense stuff, but all for the better. Feedback: Hey, I really would like your feedback. [0] The so-called "First Run" screen is a very annoying false start, where you're bombarded with about a dozen messages about the program itself and its various needs, which are completely unrelated to this product. You don't seem to be able to interact with the pages behind any of these messages, and if you cancel the installation process, the additional screen appears again. [1] Not only is the description of the program very generic (on the same page where you get to chose your Windows version), there are two things you get wrong. First, you write "use to reset your password". You don't have a "password" to reset. Secondly, why would anyone use this program to get inside someone else's computer? [2] As of release 1.5.4.1, Reset Windows Password cannot open a domain-joined machine even if configured to do so. [3] Reset Windows Password crashes, and even though the program window that you get to view the log only says "An unhandled exception occurred.This application has requested the Runtime to terminate it in an unusual way. Please contact the application's support team for more information." -- even if you disable all the unnecessary services and don't use the optional disk utility -- every time you start it, it crashes on launch. [4] Once the program starts, it will usually generate a weird error dialog warning that the installation process was canceled before completing. This can be circumvented by starting the program.exe manually. Reset Windows Password doesn't have a "restart" option under Options -> General. [5] The "Accepts no account credentials" disclaimer that, when present, consists of a list of two items: a generic explanation of what the program does, and a list of "all Microsoft accounts supported". The first one is completely generic and the latter one is... weird, because there's only a single accepted Microsoft account! It's extremely likely that the "accepts no account credentials" disclaimer is actually due to the use of a deprecated/never-supported feature of the operating system. a) The first screen, where you must pick your Windows version, is useless, as it gives no useful information to the user, and requests not only to shut down the computer, but to also disconnect from the network. b) If you press the Next button, instead of displaying the "First Run" screen, the application inserts itself into a long process, where about a dozen warnings and messages
